Europeana: The political vision

‘Digitisation and online accessibility of cultural material are essential to highlight cultural and scientific heritage, to inspire the creation of new content and to encourage new online services to emerge. They help to democratise access to culture and knowledge and to develop the information society and the knowledge-based economy.’

European Council of Ministers, 20 November 2008

Overview of Europeana

- A portal that integrates the digitised holdings of Europe's libraries, archives, museums and audiovisual collections
- Prototype launched in November 2008 with 2 million items
- Currently gives access to 20 million items
- 1,500 content providers
- Interface in 29 languages
- Funded mainly by the European Commission

Fossil rhinoceroses from Hopefield, South Africa

Creator: Hooijer D.A. | Singer R. |

Type: Text |

Subject: 38.22 ; 42.84 |

Relation: Fossil rhinoceroses from Hopefield, South Africa (URN:ISSN:0024-0672) (Volume 37) (Issue 8)

Description: INTRODUCTION The fossil specimens of rhinoceroses recovered at the "Elandsfontein" site, Hopefield, Cape Province, belong to the two living species of Africa, viz., Ceratotherium simum (Burchell) and Diceros bicornis (L.) (Singer, 1954). Both are widely distributed in the African Pleistocene (see Hopwood and Hollyfield, 1954), and their distinguishing dental characters have been described by Cooke (1950). The purpose of the present publication is to place the Hopefield material on record. The general age of the Hopefield fauna is considered to be early Upper Pleistocene, but it is probable that part of the fauna dates from the late Middle Pleistocene (Singer, 1957). In the material recorded below Ceratotherium is about four times less abundantly represented than is Diceros. The fact that t...

EUROPEANA API SERVICES: EMBED. ENGAGE. GROW

What are they?

Europeana API services are web services allowing search and display of Europeana collections in your website and applications.

You can choose between two services depending on your needs, website concept and available technical resources:

Europeana Search API (Application Programming Interface) allows you to build applications of your own: from a customised view of the Europeana content on your websites (for instance, how much information to be shown, where, and in what format) to creative mash-ups and new services such as an iPhone app. The API is based on the Open Search standard, and developers will find it easy to work with.

Europeana Search Widget is a ready-made search box suitable for organisations who want to enable search in Europeana collections with the least possible effort. The widget is easily styled, configured and quickly embedded by simply copying and pasting an HTML-snippet into your website.

Currently, Europeana API services are only available to Europeana network partners. For more detailed information, please check the Europeana API Terms of Use.

How can you benefit from them?

Our API services support your efforts to:

- Enrich search results from your collections with diverse, relevant information from Europeana
- Offer novel API-based applications for refined content usage and visualisation
- Grow your online presence by raising your profile, increasing your web traffic and building loyal and active user communities

Europeana search (API)

Related content from Europeana is shown under the PIONIER Network Digital Libraries Federation search results. Since they are a Europeana aggregator, their own objects in Europeana are filtered out of the API responses in order to avoid duplicate hits.

Example: An example of search result for Chopin

Case study: Read more about the implementation

Related items widget

The PIONIER Network Digital Libraries Federation have a related items widget that uses the Google Translate API to translate keywords to other languages before sending them to the Europeana API.

Example: An example object

This widget will be installed on the individual sites of the member libraries of the PIONIER Network Digital Libraries Federation.
