DSPACE

https://dspace.org/

Matshikiza’s King Kong Re-heard: A Pianistic Inquiry

Mnana, Yonela

2020-07
Arts Research Africa, The Wits School of Arts, University of the Witwatersrand
https://hdl.handle.net/10539/29239

How did Todd Matshikiza, the famed Drum magazine reporter, pianist, and composer of King Kong, the South African hit musical of the 1950s, straddle these multiple worlds in his music? Drawing on my own experience as a jazz pianist, I attempted to answer this question through a performed analysis of an unreleased solo piano recording by Matshikiza. As a performer, my research aims to be not only about, but in the culture of South African solo jazz piano tradition.

Downloaded from a DSpace repository. https://dspace.org/

DOI: https://doi.org/10.17605/OSF.IO/A9PF7

PERFORMANCE-LECTURE

MATSHIKIZA'S KING KONG RE-HEARD: A PIANISTIC INQUIRY

YONELA MNANA

This article is licensed under a Creative Commons Attribution 4.0 International (CC BY 4.0) licence:
https://creativecommons.org/licenses/by/4.0

How did Todd Matshikiza, the famed Drum magazine reporter, pianist, and composer of King Kong, the South African hit musical of the 1950s, straddle these multiple worlds in his music? Drawing on my own experience as a jazz pianist, I attempted to answer this question through a performed analysis of an unreleased solo piano recording by Matshikiza. As a performer, my research aims to be not only about, but in the culture of South African solo jazz piano tradition.

YAMAHA

Yonela is a jazz pianist, teacher and PhD candidate in jazz scholarship. He is an ARA fellow in the Wits School of Arts; yonelamnana@gmail.com