

Power, identity and agency at work in the popular economies of Soweto and Black Johannesburg

By

Paul Friedrich Detlev Krige

Submitted in fulfilment of the requirements for the degree

DOCTOR OF PHILOSOPHY

In the Faculty of Humanities
School of Social Sciences
Department of Anthropology
University of the Witwatersrand

January, 2011

Supervisor: Prof. André P. Czeglédy

ABSTRACT

Thesis Title: Power, identity and agency at work in the popular economies of Soweto and Black Johannesburg

Supervisor: Prof. André P. Czeglédy

Department: Anthropology

Degree For Which This Thesis Is Submitted: Doctor of Philosophy

Abstract: This thesis investigates a number of economic and financial practices, processes, relationships, actors and institutions prevalent in the residential areas that form part of Johannesburg that is known as Soweto, all of which have in common the exchange, hoarding, spending and risking of cash money. It describes actual flows of monies between actors and through popular economic institutions which are embedded in social relations of friendship and kinship, neighbourhood life and socially constructed identities. Building on the anthropological literature that seeks to show how money flows carry meaning as well as having function, it inquires into the meanings such flows of money - between popular institutions and social groups and across social classes - have for a range of differently situated participants in the popular economies. It explores the ways in which institutions and practices within the popular economies are deployed by actors and groups so as to direct flows of monies into certain social networks and relationships while redirecting it away from others, highlighting the agency of actors and groups in relation to their position in the local and larger political economy. Employing elements of practice theory, as well as perspectives from both political economy and cultural economy approaches to everyday life, the thesis offers arguments about power, identity, agency and state sovereignty in the context of the history of Black Johannesburg under apartheid and makes a contribution to our understanding of the material and symbolic structures of everyday life in contemporary Soweto and Johannesburg.

Key Words: Popular economies, finance, saving, money lending, gambling, consumption, everyday life, Soweto, Black Johannesburg, South Africa, power, identity, agency, urban anthropology.

DECLARATION

I declare that this thesis is my own, unaided work. It is submitted for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy at the University of the Witwatersrand, Johannesburg. It has not been submitted before for any degree or examination in any university.

Detlev Krige

Date

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

In writing this thesis and conducting the research on which it is based, I have met and been inspired by numerous people. I wish to express my sincere thanks to all of them, even though not all of them are mentioned here. In particular, I wish to thank those men and women who spoke to me on condition of anonymity while allowing me glimpses of their lives and families and households and budgets and heartbreaks – while I do not mention you here by name, your help and openness in receiving, accommodating and protecting me as I conducted my research is unspeakable. I acknowledge those friends, comrades and neighbours I made whilst conducting this research – men and women from all over Soweto who allowed me into their homes, backrooms, shacks, healing practices, lekgotlas, shebeens, stokvels, kitchens, cars, circles of friends, family gatherings, ward committee meetings, public marches, weddings, bachelor parties, night vigils, funerals, ‘after tears’, gambling houses, offices – and I remain forever indebted and grateful to your kindness, openness and willingness to engage with me. I hope this thesis lives up to your expectations.

Thank you Todd Lethapa for assisting me with the initial phases of my research as well as Thabo Mokoena for finding me a backroom in ‘Standville’ when no one else thought I was serious about finding one ekasi. And you too, Mareka, for the risk you took in making those important initial introductions for me.

The Wits Institute for Social and Economic Research (WISER) at the University of the Witwatersrand was my intellectual home for four years, including for the duration of the two years of field work I resided in Soweto. Without the intellectual and financial support I received through WISER’s four-year Doctoral Fellowship programme I would not have been able to commence this project. My time at Wiser was truly remarkable and I remember with fondness the stimulating environment Deborah Posel created on the 6th floor of the Richard Ward Building. I would also like to express my appreciation to Deborah for going beyond her duties in assisting me when my motor vehicle was stolen in the suburbs and I had to take ‘a taxi to Soweto’.

Moreover, WISER was ‘made’ by the people who passed through its doors and passages and I remain indebted to all the colleagues and friends I made there. A special thanks to my fellow Doctoral Fellows – Grace, Jeremy, Tlou, Nsizwa, Kgamadi, Dominique, France, Phaswane, Nhlanhla, Abueng, Robert – for their support, solidarity and efforts at forging a learning community. I also want to extend thanks to the Department of Anthropology at Wits for their support, financially and otherwise.

Over the years several other institutions offered me support, whether directly or indirectly. Robin Palmer provided invaluable support for me when I was teaching in the Department of Anthropology at Rhodes University, over and above our weekly watching of the Sopranos. During the same period Greg Ruiters brought to life for me the non-anthropological literature on South Africa’s political economy, while Vuyo Booi forced me to rethink several of my ‘anthropological’ assumptions. Viv Ojong continued to encourage me to write, and made my stay at the University of KwaZulu-Natal so much more enjoyable. I would also like to salute the many Anthropology students at the universities where I have taught over the past six years - Rhodes University in particular as well as the Universities of KwaZulu-Natal, Pretoria and Johannesburg – and who responded positively and critically to my teaching and who forced me to clarify the arguments and conclusions presented in this thesis.

No research and thesis of this type is possible without the labour, help and knowledge of a larger research community. I would like to thank several very patient and knowledgeable people who helped me directly with the thesis by reading parts of this thesis, and in no particular order: Lars Buur, Steffen Jensen, Euclides Gonçalves and Chris de Wet. Chris de Wet, Professor in Anthropology at Rhodes University, made an unselfish contribution to the process of me finalising this thesis by reading four of my chapters and offering extensive comments. Deborah James, Professor in Anthropology from the London School of Economics and Political Science, has been a constant source of support and encouragement in my research endeavours since I studied for a MSc at the LSE – I thank her for that and remain greatly indebted. She has also provided invaluable and incisive comments on several of the chapters contained in this thesis. Members of the Anthropology Phd Reading Group at Wits University who read earlier drafts of sections of this thesis are also acknowledged.

My deepest appreciation also goes out to my supervisor, André Czeglédy, for his never-ending encouragement, support, analytical insight and the way in which he allowed me to proceed independently and at my own pace.

Finally, I would like to thank my parents and siblings for their continued support. Carel and Juan offered me accommodation when I was homeless, and many others helped me to survive through the years. I hope at some point I can return your kindness.

I am, of course, solely responsible for the arguments and conclusions presented here.

DEDICATION

In Memory Of

~ The Late Bra Ben ~

~ The Late Oom Bey ~

~ The Late Temba ~

~The Late Nathi Majozi ~

And Specially For

 Nesta Amani ***

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Title page	i
Abstract	ii
Declaration	iii
Acknowledgements	iv
Dedication	vi
Table of contents	vii

Chapter one

The popular economies of Soweto and Black Johannesburg in perspective

1.1	The research problematique	1
1.2	The theoretical context	16
1.2.1	The limits of systemic theories in understanding urban, everyday economies	16
1.2.2	The legacy of cultural and structural explanations of poverty	23
1.2.3	From looking at systems to exploring practices and processes in everyday life	27
1.2.4	The rapprochement between political economy and cultural economy	31
1.2.5	Rethinking community and identity as praxis and process	35
1.3	Methodological and ethical considerations	38
1.4	The structure and outline of the thesis	41

Chapter two

From municipal townships to suburban residential areas: The development of the South Western Townships and an ethnographic sketch of a contemporary Sowetan neighbourhood

2.1	Introduction	44
2.2	City growth, inner city slums and the African municipal township	52
2.3	The legacies of political subjugation and economic impoverishment	64
2.4	Local histories: Situating the neighbourhood of Standville in time	70
2.5	'Soft Soweto': An ethnographic sketch of everyday life in the neighbourhood of Standville	81

Chapter three

Social class, community and identity: Past patterns and present practices

3.1	Introduction	102
3.2	Social cleavages, social labels and social class considerations	103
3.3	Consumption and identity	111
3.4	Poverty, marginality and political culture	119
3.5	'Hard Soweto': Postapartheid demographics, trends and the politics of being counted	124

Chapter four

‘Credit in the time of change’: The figure and practice of the small-scale neighbourhood moneylender

4.1	Introduction	136
4.2	The neighbourhood money lender: performing the social and emphasising the personal	148
4.3	An ethnographic contextualisation: The case of Seb	153
4.4	The organisation and dynamics of informal credit relations	160
4.4.1	Types of lenders and sources of capital	160
4.4.2	Information, formulations of trustworthiness and forms of collateral	164
4.4.3	The rhythms of informal lending and an example of a loan book	167
4.4.4	Motivations for borrowing	171
4.5	Discourses of indebtedness, power and luck in informal credit relations	173
4.6	Economic and financial formalisation and the quest for credit integration	181

Chapter five

‘We are running for a living’: Work, leisure and speculation in a popular numbers lottery

5.1	Introduction	190
5.2	An ethnographic contextualisation: The Kliptown bank and Ma Shabalala	198
5.3	The sociological organisation of fahfee : bankers, runners, players and numbers	204
5.4	Runner and player profiles: Gender and social class dynamics	208
5.5	Runner strategies: schema documents, symbolism and being clever	213
5.5.1	List and schema strategies	213
5.5.2	Symbolism and the everyday	216
5.5.3	Practices and notions of “being clever”	218
5.6	Discourses of randomness, chance and (Chinese) outsiders	219
5.7	The significance of numbers lotteries in the popular economies	224

Chapter six

‘Letting money work for us’: Masculinity, social reproduction and the shifting dynamics of group savings

6.1	Introduction	228
6.2	An ethnographic contextualisation: Becoming a member	234
6.3	The organisation and transformation of the Standville Club	236
6.3.1	Membership dynamics between 2004-2005: people with the ‘right stuff’	237
6.3.2	Monthly meetings	241
6.3.3	Types of monies, the practice of banking and the vision of ‘letting money work for us’	242
6.3.4	A constitution, new rules and the importance of working on the physical body	246
6.4	From stokvel to lekgotla : changing patterns in organisational practice	249
6.5	The consumption of alcohol in the context of growing inequality and consumerism	254
6.6	The changing fortunes of stokvel in public culture and discourse	263

Chapter seven

‘We are not all dustmongers here’: New social elites, the meaning of consumption practices and the reformulation of work and leisure

7.1	Introduction	275
7.2	The Caste Light Crew: Changes in beer consumption as a rite of passage	280
7.3	Practices and rhythms of sociability, reciprocity and mobility: beer consumption between work and leisure and suburb and township	284
7.4	The manufacturing of ‘Black Diamonds’: the cultural politics of the middle class	294
7.5	Resisting representation: “The Black Diamond is a white man’s construct for an imaginary black man’s world”	301
7.6	The cultural struggle over the meaning of black wealth and consumption amidst black poverty	304
7.7	Conclusions	308

Chapter eight

Theorising power, identity and agency in the popular economies of Soweto and Black Johannesburg

8.1	Power, resistance, statecraft and sovereignty in the popular economies	312
8.2	Regional networks, the residential neighbourhood and the social character of Black Johannesburg	319
8.3	Formulations of social class and its social expression through consumption practices	323
8.4	African municipal townships as residential areas and as sites of consumption	330
8.5	The multiple roles of actors and the multiple meanings of institutions	332
8.6	The disjuncture between ‘local’ and ‘state’ and ‘public’ discourses	334
8.7	Concluding remarks	339

Bibliography and sources

I.	Published books, chapters and journal articles	344
II.	Academic theses	360
III.	Newspaper and magazine articles, press releases, opinion columns and internet sources	361
IV.	Unpublished papers, speeches and reports	367
V.	Legislation and state policy programmes and guidelines	370

List of Abbreviations	x
List of Appendixes	xi

LIST OF ABBREVIATIONS

AA	Affirmative Action
ABSA	Amalgamated Banks South Africa
AFP	Agence France-Presse
ANC	African National Congress
ATM	Automatic Teller Machine
APF	Anti-Privatisation Forum
BAD	Bantu Affairs Department
BCM	Black Consciousness Movement
BEE	Black Economic Empowerment
BER	Bureau For Economic Research (University of Stellenbosch)
BMF	Black Management Forum
COSATU	Congress of South African Trade Unions
DTI	Department Of Trade And Industry
FSCC	Financial Sector Campaign Coalition
GDP	Gross Domestic Product
GEAR	Growth, Employment And Redistribution Programme
ID	Identity Documents
ILO	International Labour Organisation
IMF	International Monetary Fund
JCC	Johannesburg City Council
LPM	Landless People's Movement
LSM	Living Standards Measure
MFRC	Micro Finance Regulatory Council
NAB	Native Advisory Board
NAD	Native Affairs Department
NCA	National Credit Act
NCF	National Consumer Forum
NEAD	Non-European Affairs Department (City Of Johannesburg)
NEPAD	New Partnership For Africa's Development
NGO	Non Governmental Organisation
NP	National Party
NRB	Native Resettlement Board
RDP	Reconstruction And Development Programme
ROSCA	Rotating Savings And Credit Association
SAARF	South African Advertising Research Foundation
SACP	South African Communist Party
SAIRR	South African Institute for Race Relations
SAPA	South African Press Association
SAPS	South African Police Services
SCC	Soweto Community Council
SECC	Soweto Electricity Crisis Committee
SMME	Small Medium And Micro Enterprise
TAC	Treatment Action Campaign
UBC	Urban Bantu Council
WB	World Bank

LIST OF APPENDIXES

Appendix A

A photograph of the South Western Townships published in 1974 in the journal Sechaba Volume 8(4), p. 2.

Appendix B

A poem by Siphso Sepamla entitled 'Soweto', published in Voices from within: Black poetry from southern Africa (Introduced and edited by Michael Chapman and Achmat Dangor. Johannesburg: AD Donker, 1986, pp. 127-8).

Appendix C

A list of the number symbolism in the daily Chinese numbers lottery fahfee.

Appendix D

Two images of 'betting slips' and 'receipts' that form part of the paraphernalia encountered in fahfee.

Appendix E

Three different schemes constructed by fahfee runners in their efforts to 'beat' the 'Chinaman'.

Appendix F

Six photographs documenting scenes of everyday life.