Chronopolitics:
Public events and the temporalities of state power in Mozambique

Euclides Gonçalves

A thesis submitted to the Department of Anthropology, Faculty of Humanities, University of Witwatersrand, Johannesburg, in fulfilment of the requirements for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy

Johannesburg, February 2012
Abstract
This thesis examines state organised public events as a way to understand the nature and modalities of state power in contemporary Mozambique. My research is based on 18 months of ethnographic fieldwork in the districts of Inharrime and Zavala, in the Southern Province of Inhambane. During this period I interviewed and followed the everyday work of state officials and bureaucrats and observed public meetings, political rallies, inauguration ceremonies, celebrations of commemorative dates and public holidays, state visits by “high dignitaries” and resulting orientações - authoritative written and oral documents that are generally taken by local state officials and bureaucrats as guidelines for the implementation of government policies and programs. I also conducted archival research at the district and provincial level from where I obtained some of the regulatory documents and reports referred to in my analysis.

I argue that state organised public events produce a chronopolitics upon which rests the reproduction of the state. The research highlights three temporalities that are constitutive of such chronopolitics. The first temporality I have called the “time of agitation” in which the quiet days of the routine bureaucratic practices are punctuated by the nthima-nthima (agitation) caused by visits of “high dignitaries.” Such visits constitute occasions for the performance of state visibility and the presentation of hierarchies. This is done through the marshalling of crowds to participate in “warm receptions” and “mass rallies” for the visiting “high dignitaries.” It is also during visits of “high dignitaries” that state officials mark the territory by displaying state symbols, disseminating official discourse and presenting high ranking officials as the embodiment of the state. The second temporality I have termed the “time of performativity.” Here the analysis focuses on platforms set up for public rallies on which state officials, bureaucrats and members of the public negotiate what can be said and how it can be said. It is also on these platforms that government declared policies and programs are performatively accomplished by “talking” about them. The third temporality is the “time of provisionality”, a result of state officials and bureaucrats’ strategic use of timing. Here the key resources are orientações. In everyday bureaucratic practice, the continuous revision of these regulatory documents determines the pace of policy implementation.

While for analytical purposes I have distinguished three temporalities, my ethnographic accounts point to the intersections between them to reveal a mode of state power I have termed chronopolitics. In doing so, this thesis provides an analytical counterpoint to dominant instrumental readings of power that see political action only in terms of the negotiation of consent. The results of my interpretation of state organized public events show that neither state officials and bureaucrats nor members of the public work only with instrumental interests of that kind in view. The immediate effect occasioned by the staging and participation in state organised public events is the inscription of state officials, bureaucrats and members of the public alike in the temporalities of the state.
Declaration

I declare that this thesis is my own unaided work, and has never been published elsewhere or submitted to fulfill the requirements of any other degree. It is submitted for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy in Social Anthropology at the University of the Witwatersrand, Johannesburg.

Johannesburg, 15 February 2012
Table of contents

ACRONYMS .................................................................................................................................. III
GLOSSARY ..................................................................................................................................... IV
NOTES ON THE TEXT AND TERMINOLOGY .............................................................................. V
LIST OF CASES ............................................................................................................................ VII
LIST OF ILLUSTRATIONS ........................................................................................................... VIII
ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS ................................................................................................................. IX

INTRODUCTION ............................................................................................................................. 1
  Problem statement ....................................................................................................................... 1
  Studying the state ...................................................................................................................... 7
  Ritualizing public events ........................................................................................................... 12
  African state organized public events ..................................................................................... 16
  Study area and data .................................................................................................................. 23
    Data generation ...................................................................................................................... 26
  Thesis outline ............................................................................................................................ 32

PART I. HISTORICAL SCENES ...................................................................................................... 36

CHAPTER ONE .............................................................................................................................. 37
  The bureaucratic ethos in historical perspective ...................................................................... 37
    Introduction ........................................................................................................................... 37
    Colonial administration ......................................................................................................... 39
    The enemy in state bureaucracy ............................................................................................ 42
      Offensives and purges ......................................................................................................... 44
    In continuous vigilance .......................................................................................................... 48
    A "rule of practice..." ........................................................................................................... 53
    Conclusion .............................................................................................................................. 58

CHAPTER TWO ............................................................................................................................ 60
  Quiet days: scenes of interaction ............................................................................................. 60
    Introduction ........................................................................................................................... 60
    Actors and institutions ............................................................................................................ 60
      The povoado ......................................................................................................................... 60
      The localidade .................................................................................................................... 67
      The administrative post ....................................................................................................... 72
    The district administration .................................................................................................... 74
    Officials and bureaucrats in action ....................................................................................... 76
      Mobilization: “government” and “political work” ............................................................... 76
      Of tax collection .................................................................................................................. 79
      Of patriotic education ......................................................................................................... 81
    Conclusion .............................................................................................................................. 82

PART II. THE TIME OF AGITATION ............................................................................................ 84

CHAPTER THREE .......................................................................................................................... 85
  Nhima-nhima: state visits by “high dignitaries” ....................................................................... 85
    Introduction ........................................................................................................................... 85
    The usual actors ..................................................................................................................... 87
    In continuous preparation ...................................................................................................... 91
      Preparatory meetings ........................................................................................................... 92
    Mobilization, platforms and quick fixes ............................................................................. 93
Continuous changes of dates

97

NHIMA-NHIMA! ........................................................................................................... 98

THE TIME OF AGITATION: NHIMA-NHIMA AS PERFORMANCE .......................... 108

CONCLUSION ............................................................................................................. 109

CHAPTER FOUR

111

XITUKU NI MBAULA AND THE PERFORMANCE OF TERRITORIALITY .................. 111

INTRODUCTION ...................................................................................................... 111

ON “OPEN GOVERNANCE” .................................................................................... 113

EXCHANGING EXPERIENCES, MARKING TERRITORY ........................................ 115

THE XITUKU NI MBAULA ....................................................................................... 118

THE XITUKU NI MBAULA AS AN EVENT OF PRESENTATION .............................. 127

CONCLUSION ............................................................................................................. 128

PART III. THE TIME OF PERFORMATIVITY

130

CHAPTER FIVE

131

OFFICIALDOM ON THE PLATFORM ........................................................................ 131

INTRODUCTION ...................................................................................................... 131

THE SPEECH GENRES OF OFFICIALDOM .............................................................. 132

The hortatory speech: mobilization through identification ........................................ 138

The pedagogic speech: the enemies of the people .................................................... 140

The celebratory speech and “the great accomplishments” ...................................... 142

POLITICO-LITURGICAL DIALOGUES, SLOGANS AND JOKES ............................. 144

CONCLUSION ............................................................................................................. 148

CHAPTER SIX

150

THE PEOPLE ON THE PLATFORM ........................................................................ 150

“THE PEOPLE” IN STATE-ORGANISED PUBLIC EVENTS ....................................... 151

THE PEOPLE IN THREE REGISTERS ................................................................. 153

PEOPLE ON THE PLATFORM .................................................................................... 157

Creative uses of official discourse ........................................................................... 157

Negotiating meaning in authoritative discourse .................................................... 161

ON PEOPLE’S PARTICIPATION IN STATE EVENTS ................................................... 165

CONCLUSION ............................................................................................................. 166

PART IV. THE TIME OF PROVISIONALITY

168

CHAPTER SEVEN

169

ORIENTAÇÕES AS PROVISIONAL AND AMBIGUOUS REGULATORY DOCUMENTS ..... 169

INTRODUCTION ...................................................................................................... 169

OF WRITTEN AND ORAL DOCUMENTS ............................................................... 171

THE POLITICAL LIFE OF ORIENTAÇÕES ............................................................ 173

PROVISIONALITY AND AMBIGUITY ..................................................................... 177

Donors and NGOs ..................................................................................................... 186

SYMBOLS OF AUTHORITY ..................................................................................... 188

CONCLUSION ............................................................................................................. 190

CONCLUSION

192