CHAPTER ONE

1 INTRODUCTION
1.1 A contextual background on global news flows 12
1.2 Background to the study 17
1.3 Problem statement and the rationale 20
  1.3.1 The importance of news flows in the development of the (global) public sphere 24
1.4 Objectives of the study 26
1.5 Research Questions 27
1.6 Theoretical approach 28
1.7 Methodological design 29
1.8 Outline of chapters 31

CHAPTER TWO

2 INFORMATION FLOWS IN A GLOBALISED WORLD
2.1 Contextualising and conceptualising globalisation and information flows 34
  2.1.1 Sceptics, globalist, and transformationalist definitions of globalisation 34
  2.1.2 The influence of global market capitalism in the globalisation of news and on News agencies 41
2.2 Studies on news agencies and “global imbalances” in news flows 45
  2.2.1 An ‘international relations’ perspective 47
  2.2.2 World system theory and ‘glo-cal’ news exchanges 51
  2.2.3 News imbalances and the (global) public sphere 55
2.3 Internal and external pressures on news agencies in the global flow of news 61
  2.3.1 News flows in developing contexts and in Africa 65
  2.3.2 State control and government ownership of news agencies in Africa 70
2.4 Theoretical perspectives relevant in the 21st century

- 2.4.1 Michael Schudson on “the sociology of news production (revisited again)”
- 2.4.2 Vincent Mosco and the integrated political economy of communication
- 2.4.3 Critical political economy according to Golding and Murdock’s integrated approach

2.5 Conclusion

CHAPTER THREE

3 QUALITATIVE RESEARCH DESIGN AND METHODS

- 3.1 Introduction: the qualitative research paradigm
- 3.2 Data collection and analysis: the inductive approach
  - 3.2.1 In-depth, open-ended interviews
  - 3.2.2 Secondary data
  - 3.2.3 Purposive sampling (or theoretical sampling)
  - 3.2.4 Field interview procedure
  - 3.2.5 Reliability and validity
- 3.3 Data processing and secondary analysis: open coding and the “constant comparative method” in developing thematic questions
  - 3.3.1 Theoretical sensitivity
  - 3.3.2 Axial coding: a process of re-integrating categories and subcategories
  - 3.3.3 Selective coding and the use of memos and computer technology in integrating categories
  - 3.3.4 The procedure for data coding and analysis: (phase I)
  - 3.3.5 Procedure for coding and analysis (phase II)
- 3.4 Conclusion

CHAPTER FOUR

4 ADAPTIVE STRATEGIES OF NEWS AGENCIES: NICHE AREAS IN NEWS EXCHANGE

- 4.1 Ownership, structure, and operations at various news agencies
  - 4.1.1 A brief history of ownership at SAPA
  - 4.1.2 The Associated Press operations, ownership, and control
  - 4.1.3 Reuters’ structure, ownership, and news operation
  - 4.1.4 Agence France-Presse (AFP) operations
  - 4.1.5 Deutsche Presse-Agentur (DPA): ownership and structure
  - 4.1.6 The Pan-African News Agency (PANA): a brief introduction
4.1.7 The Inter Press Service (IPS) 146
4.2 The significance of niche areas of news production in the exchange relationships among news agencies 150
4.2.1 A niche for SAPA and the relations of news exchange with the global news agencies 150
4.2.2 The ‘success’ of the global news agencies in developing niche areas of news production 158
4.2.3 A niche for PANA and its news exchange in Africa 163
4.2.4 Development: a key focus and niche of IPS 167
4.3 An analysis and conclusion 171

CHAPTER FIVE

5 THE REGIONALISATION OF NEWS AGENCIES AS AN ADAPTIVE STRATEGY IN GLOBAL NEWS FLOWS 182
5.1 Competition for news markets and “media models” resulting from the activities of news agencies 183
5.1.1 Monopolisation and the competitive drive for global news markets 193
5.1.2 The main client base of global news agencies 197
5.2 The regionalisation of bureaus and the fragmentation of news in the operations of news agencies: revisiting debates on monopolisation 200
5.2.1 The regionalisation of news flows and news bureaus 200
5.2.2 Regionalisation and the sceptics’ and globalists’ positions in relation to globalisation 203
5.2.3 Fragmentation of news: a concomitant effect of the expansion of global news agencies 206
5.3 News exchange agreements in the developing South Africa context 207
5.3.1 News exchange agreements between the global news agencies and the local South African Press Association 208
5.4 The activities of the global news agencies, SAPA, and PANA in Africa 218
5.4.1 Are continental news agencies worldwide in decline? 219
5.4.2 The role of SAPA in Africa in relation to the African news agencies 221
5.4.3 Global news agencies: debating “negative” reporting in Africa 227
5.5 Conclusion 239
CHAPTER SIX

6 PROCESSES OF NEWS SELECTION AND GATEKEEPING AT NEWS AGENCIES 242

6.1 The changing global news environment and its influence on the activities at news agencies and in the emergence of the global public sphere 246

6.1.1 Defining “news sense” in the selection of news and the application of news values 251

6.1.2 Selection and production practices at SAPA 256

6.1.3 Reuters’ news selection practices emphasizing the centrality of their client markets 268

6.1.4 Associated Press news selection practices 271

6.1.5 AFP and news selection practices 274

6.1.6 News selection at DPA 277

6.1.7 IPS: selection influenced by its development focus 280

6.2 Revising debates on imbalances in global news flows 282

6.2.1 SAPA on imbalances in global news flows 283

6.2.2 Reuters on imbalances in global news flows 295

6.2.3 Associated Press on imbalances in global news flows 297

6.2.4 AFP on the issue of imbalances 304

6.2.5 IPS on imbalances in global news flows 306

6.3 Analysis & conclusion 309

CHAPTER SEVEN

7 CONTINUITIES AND SHIFTS IN GLOBAL NEWS FLOWS: A SOCIOLOGICAL ANALYSIS 313

7.1 Globalisation, news flow and the post-industrial society 316

7.1.1 Global consciousness as the symbolic space for identity formation and knowledge production: Issues of power 328

7.2. News agencies, the impact of societal influence and competing ‘cultures of news’ 334

7.2.1 Colonialism and the construction of ‘the nation’ 339

7.2.2 The construction of global consciousness in the news media 340

7.2.3 Selection, gatekeepers and objectivity as central concerns in the flow of news and the impact on society 342

7.2.4 Objectivity and biases in new reporting? 345

7.3 News agencies’ adaptations to global change and constraints on the formation of global consciousness 346

7.3.1 Prospects for news agencies in a post-industrial society 348
7.3.2 The inability and inefficiency of the privately- and state-owned news media to reflect conscientious, critical thinking and change

7.3.3 Locating global consciousness in the public sphere, and the ‘fragmentation of news’

7.3.4 Ownership of news agencies and the issue of power: social power versus media power

7.3.5 Competing for survival versus the traditional ‘monopolisation of news markets’ debate

7.3.6 News agencies as reputable news sources versus “citizen journalism” and the prevalence of “blogs” on the Internet

7.4 Conclusion

CHAPTER EIGHT

8 CONCLUDING REMARKS

8.1 An overview of the study

8.2 The main findings and explanatory issues

8.2.1 The ‘adaptive responses’ from (global) news agencies to a transforming global news environment

8.2.2 Regionalisation: the extension of global news agencies’ operations across the globe

8.2.3 Innovative news production processes, new cultural formations and the future of news agencies in an emerging post-industrial world order

8.3 Some methodological considerations and limitations of the study, and recommendations for future research
