REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH AND DENIED PATERNITY: THE POLITICS OF MEN’S FERTILITY.

A report on a study project presented to

The Department of Social Work

School of Human and Community Development

Faculty of Humanities

University of the Witwatersrand

In fulfilment of the requirements

For the Master’s Degree in Social Work by Dissertation

By Polite Chauke

Student Number: 381630

Supervised by: Associate Professor Grace Khunou
DECLARATION

I hereby declare that this research report that I have submitted is my original work. The sources used in the report were duly acknowledged.

Signature: ________________________
Date: ________________________
Acknowledgments

I would like to express my gratitude to the following people;

- My supervisor Grace Khunou thank you for the support, the mentorship, wisdom and the faith you have in me. May God continue to bless you in everything you do.

- To all the participants in the study, thank you for sharing a part of yourselves with me, your stories will be engraved in my heart for as long as I live.

- To ThatoMuleya, Nkateko Maluleke and Macdonald Chauke, thank you guys for carrying me through this research and believing me.

Finally, To my family; thank you for loving me and supporting me throughout this research and for understanding when I was an absent daughter, sister, niece and granddaughter because of my studies. You are all heaven sent.
ABSTRACT

Issues of fertility, population growth and birth control are synonymous with women. Therefore, there is a void of the male perspective on issues pertaining to reproductive health. There is a reproductive health discourse, in which bio-psychosocial service such as family planning is woman-based. Whilst on the other hand statistics on absent fathers and contested pregnancies, are reaching millions and thus the effectiveness of these services are questionable. Therefore, men’s health and sexuality requires careful understanding so as to unfold narrations of denied paternity and men’s ‘assumed’ lack of responsibility in questions of contraception. Through in-depth interviews with 14 unmarried men from the townships of Soweto and Kagiso, this research found that contraception is a gendered concept that constructs various experiences for men in how they perceive sexual reproductive health services. It also found that denied paternity and father absences are rooted not only in historical factors but also in feminised conceptions of contraception and how this conception speaks to notions of how responsibility is distributed and withheld.

Furthermore, it acknowledges that there are different conceptions of denied paternity and father absence and thus, shapes men’s experiences and expectations of fatherhood. Finally, it argues that masculine sexualities, notions of pleasure and issues of fertility are shaped by sexual socialisation processes; this also links how men transition from boyhood to manhood through circumcision and initiation schools not only as a cultural and religious practice but as a health practice. These narratives were captured through using thematic content analysis in investigating unmarried men’s perceptions of contraceptives and ideas of father absence and denied paternity. This research contributes to the existing knowledge on family and children services, with specific attention to family planning and the provision of services to young men and women regarding reproductive rights and responsibilities.

Key words: Sexual reproductive health, masculinities, denied paternity
Table of contents

Declaration................................................................................................................................................... i
Acknowledgments ....................................................................................................................................... ii
Abstract ...................................................................................................................................................... iii

CHAPTER ONE: Introduction
1.1 Introduction .......................................................................................................................................... 1
1.2 Rationale................................................................................................................................................ 3
1.3 Purpose of the study.............................................................................................................................. 4
1.3.1 Research question............................................................................................................................. 4
1.3.2 Research questions............................................................................................................................. 4
1.3.2 The primary aim and objectives of the study..................................................................................... 4
1.4 Definition of key concepts ................................................................................................................... 5

CHAPTER TWO: Literature review and theoretical framework
2.1 Gender.................................................................................................................................................... 7
2.1.2 Masculinities ....................................................................................................................................... 10
2.1.3 Men and Health................................................................................................................................ 13
2.2.1 Sexual reproductive health and men.................................................................................................. 14
2.2.2 Politics of sexual reproduction ........................................................................................................ 15
2.3 Contraception and gender dynamics .................................................................................................... 16
2.4 Notions of manhood, initiation/circumcision and sexualities ................................................................. 18
2.4.1 Circumcision as an event or a process of manhood? ....................................................................... 19
2.5 Sexuality and sexual socialization ......................................................................................................... 22
2.6 Denied paternity and father absence .................................................................................................... 25
2.6.1 History of fatherhood absence in South Africa .................................................................................. 26
2.7 Theoretical frameworks ....................................................................................................................... 27
2.7.1 Social constructivism ....................................................................................................................... 27
2.7.2 Ecosystems perspective .................................................................................................................... 28
2.7.3 Feminist analysis ............................................................................................................................... 29

CHAPTER THREE: Research design and Methodology
Introduction....................................................................................................................................................... 30
3.1 Qualitative approach.............................................................................................................................. 30
3.2 Sampling ................................................................................................................................................. 31
3.2.1 Participant profile ............................................................................................................................. 32
3.2.2 Research sites..................................................................................................................................... 32
3.3 Data collection........................................................................................................................................ 35
3.4 Research Instrumentation...................................................................................................................... 36
3.4.1 Piloting and Pre- test participant ........................................................................................................ 37
3.5 Data Analysis and dependability and reliability .................................................................................... 38
3.6 Ethical consideration............................................................................................................................. 39
3.7 Reflexivity............................................................................................................................................... 40
FINDINGS AND DISCUSSION

CHAPTER FOUR: Masculinities and meanings of conception

Introduction .......................................................................................................................................................... 44
4.1 Sexual reproductive health and men: some experience ................................................................. 44
4.1.2 Family planning for men: some positive possibilities .......................................................... 47
4.2 Contraception: it is easy to see one’s responsibility ................................................................. 50
4.3 Cultural expectations as an institution that appoints responsibility .......................... 51
Conclusion.................................................................................................................................................. 54

CHAPTER FIVE: Father absence and denied paternity in the context of feminised contraception

Introduction.......................................................................................................................................................... 55
5.1. The conceptions of denied paternity.......................................................................................... 56
5.1.1 Denied paternity: as contestation or rejection of paternal responsibility .................. 56
5.1.1.2 The fear of failure in fatherhood......................................................................................... 59
5.1.2 Denied paternity: as the denial of personhood, access and responsibility .................. 60
5.1.5 Denied paternity: as being denied or rejected by the biological father .................. 63
5.2 Father Absence..................................................................................................................................... 65
5.2.1 Father absence and female headed households and extended families ............... 67
5.2.2 Emotional absence in father present families ................................................................. 69
5.2.3 Great expectations: reactions to prospective fatherhood.............................................. 71
5.3 “We were betting the lotto”: Attitudes about sex, money and implications on fatherhood............................................................................................................................................ 72
Conclusions.................................................................................................................................................. 75

CHAPTER SIX: Manhood and Sexuality: pleasure, risks and circumcision.

Introduction.......................................................................................................................................................... 76
6.1 Sexual and Pleasure: Penis, condoms and satisfaction ......................................................... 77
6.1.1 Sexual socialization: The bold and beautiful Emmanuel and learning sex .......... 81
6.1.2 Fertility, God and manhood................................................................................................. 85
6.1.3 Sexual reproductive health: men as an addition to gender(ed) health or a concern? .. 89
6.2 Circumcision: “the removal of the foreskin is the removal of a part yourself” .......... 93
Conclusions.................................................................................................................................................. 95

CHAPTER SEVEN: Recommendation and Conclusion

7.1 Conclusion ................................................................................................................................................ 96
7.2 Recommendations......................................................................................................................... 98
7.2.1 For policy.......................................................................................................................................... 98
7.2.2 For research..................................................................................................................................... 98
7.2.3 For Social work........................................................................................................................... 98
Appendices
Appendix A: Participant Information Sheet................................................................. 110
Appendix B: Consent Form for participation in the study..............................................111
Appendix C: Consent form for audio- taping of the interview .....................................112
Appendix D: Interview Questions..............................................................................113
Appendix E: Approval Letter from the University of the Witwatersrand Human Research Ethics Committee......................................................................................115