

DSPACE

<https://dspace.org/>

Catch them young : using process drama for children's rights education.

Mtuka, Tendai

2011-04-29

<http://hdl.handle.net/10539/9628>

Catch Them Young: Using Process Drama for Children's Rights Education

By

Tendai Mtukwa
University of Witwatersrand
School of Arts

Supervisor: Dr K. C. Chinyowa

Submitted in partial fulfillment of the requirements for the degree of Master of Arts in Dramatic Art

September 2010

Statement of Originality

This work has not previously been submitted for a degree or diploma at any university. To the best of my knowledge and belief, this research report contains no material previously published or written by another person except where due referencing has been made in the report itself.

Signed _____

Acknowledgements

I would like to thank all those who made this work possible. Sincere thanks to my supervisor Dr. Chinyowa; you were always prepared to go the extra mile. Your motivation and support is invaluable.

I would also like to thank the Drama For Life Program and staff members for the support they gave me throughout the whole year.

To my fellow students in the Drama For Life Program, I would like to thank you for the debates that we shared; they stimulated my academic growth.

Finally, I would like to acknowledge my family for being my roots and my anchor throughout my journey.

Dedication

This research report is dedicated to my parents. To my father who is a firm believer in education and to my mother who believed in being there for me. I love you both. This work is also dedicated to Tatenda and Thuso you are very special guys.

Abstract

In this study, I undertake to investigate how process drama can be used as a medium for children's rights education. I enquire on how process drama can be used to teach children's rights to young children in Grade three. The study investigates whether process drama can be deployed to bridge the gap between children's rights and how the dramatic medium can be applied to teach those rights. The study is a quest to find out if the action that takes place between the dramatic world and the real world manages to yield a change in understanding or a shift in children's perception about their rights. To investigate this function of process drama, a series of drama workshops were conducted with grade three learners at Supreme College in Johannesburg over a period of two months.

The study used a case study approach within the qualitative action research methodology. The idea was to break the abstract, complex concept of children's rights down to participants' level of understanding through dramatic interaction. This study was informed by drama in education paradigms combined with process drama as theory and as practice. The research particularly focuses on the process drama techniques and how these were applied for educational purposes in order for participants to learn children's rights. These techniques were investigated as to what benefit or use they served for participants to learn their rights.

Reflective practitioner principles were used to analyze the data gathered. This means that the initial data gathered was used as a basis for better analysis to inform further ways of gathering more data. Each chapter focuses on a specific children's right. All the rights focused herein were extracted from the United Nations Convention on the Rights of Children, (UNCRC) of 1989, the South African Constitution of 1996 and the South African Child Care Act 74 of 1983. Process drama required learners' involvement and active participation. An analysis of the workshops demonstrated that process drama techniques had the ability to engage children in problematic situations as a way of learning something about their rights. The results show that whilst participants were dealing with these human situations, they were within a dualistic process dealing with their rights. Results also indicate that whilst process drama was applied to teach children's rights, it was also able to teach children a wide range of activities. This could be an indication that process drama has the ability to teach a wider range of skills in the classroom.

Table of Contents

Acknowledgements	i
Dedication	ii
Chapter 1: Background	1
1.1 Area of Research	1
1.2 Defining Children's Rights	2
1.3 Research Questions	3
1.4 Rationale	3
1.5 Literature Review	5
1.6 Theoretical Framework	9
1.7 Research Methodology	10
1.7.1 Hot Seating	11
1.7.2 Research Journal	12
1.7.3 Participant Observation	12
1.7.4 Reflective Writing	12
1.8 Ethical Considerations	13
1.10 My Role as an Action Researcher	14
1.11 Chapter Layout	14
Chapter 2: Children's Rights in South Africa	16
2.1 Introduction	16
2.2 Children's Rights in South Africa	16
2.3 Current Trends in Children's Rights in South Africa	18
2.4 Children's Rights in Post-Independence Schools	19
2.5 Access to Education in Post-Independence South Africa	21
2.6 Children's Rights and Supreme College	22
2.7 Conclusions	23
Chapter 3: The Right to Parental Care	24
3.1 Introduction	24
3.2. Pre-Text	24
3.3 Pre-pre-text	25
3.4 Workshop Structure	26

3.5 Workshop Analysis	30
3.5.1 Pre-text	30
3.5.2 Warm Ups	31
3.5.3 Metaphor	32
3.5.4 Dramatic Contract	35
3.5.5 Location, Mood and Atmosphere	36
3.5.6 Tableau	40
3.5.7 Song	41
3.5.8 Role	42
3.5.9 Ironic Contrast and Contradictions	44
3.6 Dual Affect	44
3.7 Reflection and Evaluation	46
3.8 Conclusion	46
Chapter 4: Child Labor	47
4.1 Introduction	47
4.2 Constructing Pre-Text	48
4.3 Workshop Structure	49
4.4 Workshop Analysis	52
4.4.1 Pre-text	52
4.4.2 Warm ups	52
4.4.3 Mantle of the Expert	53
4.5 Reflections and Evaluation	55
4.6 Conclusion	57
Chapter 5: The Right to Education	58
5.1 Introduction	58
5.2 Workshop Structure	58
5.3 Workshop Analysis	60
5.3.1 Warm-ups	60
5.3.2 Contrast	61
5.3.2 Metaphor	61
5.3.3 Teacher-in-Role	62
5.3.4 Tension	64

5.3.5 Suspense	64
5.4 Reflections and Evaluation	65
5.5 Conclusions	66
Chapter 6: Caregivers as Potential Violators of Children's Rights	67
6.1 Introduction	67
6.2 Preparing Learning Context	67
6.3 Workshop Structure	68
6.4 Workshop Analysis	70
6.4.1. Games and Warm ups	70
6.4.2 Role-playing	71
6.4.3 Empathy	72
6.4.4 Ritual	72
6.4.5 Denouement	74
6.4.6 Hot seating	75
6.5 Reflections	75
6.2 Reflective Writing	76
6.3 Conclusion	77
Chapter 7 Conclusions	78
7.1 General Conclusions	78
7.2 Implications of Research Findings	79
7.3 Limitations of Study	80
7.4 Concluding Remarks	81
References	82

Appendix A: Participant Information sheet

Appendix B: Permission to Conduct Research