

https://dspace.org/

Are civil society organisations effective agents of mobilisation for development in 21st century South Africa? case study of the people's budget campaign.

Egoh, Modi A.

2009-01-30T12:26:02Z
http://hdl.handle.net/10539/5987

Downloaded from a DSpace repository. https://dspace.org/

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Declaration……i

Dedication……ii

Acknowledgements……....iii

Abstract……...iv

List of acronyms……..v

List of interviewees……vi

Chapter One……..1

Background of the Study…….1

Aims of the Study……4

Main Research Questions……4

Rationale……..5

Research Methods……8

Data Collection……9

Data Analysis……13

Ethics Statement……13

Chapter Two…….14

Literature Review and Theoretical Framework……...14

Introduction……14

Part One……15

Western Political Philosophy of the Concept of Civil society……...15

Civil Society and Political Transition in Africa……18

Competing Views of Civil Society and its Role in Society……...21

Civil Society in South Africa…….25

Civil Society in the Apartheid era…….25

Civil Society in the Post-Apartheid era……28

Civil Society's Role in the Political Transformation of South Africa……..29

Pre-1994 Period…….30

Post-1994 Era…….33

Part Two……...37

A Review of the Concept of Mobilisation and Advocacy…….37

Introduction……...37

The Concept of Mobilisation……37

The Concept of Advocacy…….47

Conclusion…….49

Chapter Three…….....50

Nature and implementation of the Campaign……...50

Introduction……50

Background of the PBC…….51

Institutional Profile of the Coalition Members……..55

Structure and Functioning of the People's Budget Campaign……..59

Some Areas of PBC Campaigns……63

Conclusion…….67

Chapter Four……...69

Mobilisation and Participation in Development……..69

Introduction……69

What are the mechanisms created by the PBC to facilitate public participation of the poor in the budget process?.....70

Has the PBC succeeded in creating awareness among the poor on the budget process?.....81

Effects of the Nature of the Coalition on the Poor……....87

Conclusion…….91

Chapter Five……93

General Conclusions……...93

Recapitulating the central arguments of the study…….93

Suggestions to Strengthen the Campaign……....101

Bibliography……...103

Appendix……109

Guiding Questions for leaders of the coalition partners…….109

Guiding Questions for Community Members……109