

https://dspace.org/

The alchemical quest and renaissance epistemology: with a comparitive study of Ben Jonson's:The Alchemist and William Shakespeare's: The Tempest

Oseman, Arlene Anne

2007-03-02T11:47:45Z
http://hdl.handle.net/10539/2200

Downloaded from a DSpace repository. https://dspace.org/

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This project could not have been completed without the help and support of my family, friends, and many of my colleagues. I would especially like to thank:

Professor Anthony Parr, my supervisor, for his invaluable insight, patience and encouragement;

Professor Victor Houliston, for the untold hours he spent reading and advising upon numerous drafts of this thesis, and helping with the technical aspects of scholarship;

Dr Pier Paolo Frassinelli, for sharing with me his interest in The Tempest, and for reading and commenting on the first and last chapters of this thesis;

Gavin Sourgen, for helping to edit the final draft and contain the tendency to prolixity;

The 'Growing Our Own Timber' programme, under the auspices of Atlantic Philanthropies, for the financial support which gave me a head-start on this project;

The University Research Council, for the generous grants which allowed for research trips to Oxford and Washington DC;

The staff at the Bodleian Library, especially the team in the Duke Humphrey's Reading Room, who introduced me to the wonders of old and rare texts;

Barbara Mowatt and the staff at the Folger Shakespeare Library in Washington DC, for their help and advice on the initial structuring of my argument.

I also want to note my gratitude to the following people who supported me in a personal capacity through the inevitable highs and lows of doctoral research:

My brothers, Collin and Jason, for always being there for me;

Ashleigh Harris, for her encouragements and practical advice which kept me going through crisis after crisis;

Lynne Ferrer, who has helped me to believe in myself;

Peter Knox, SJ, who encouraged me to take the road less traveled;

Graham Pugin, SJ, who was there to pick up the pieces when I stumbled over the obstacles in that road.