When I embarked on this journey of creative and intellectual pursuit, I was met with so much support, love and encouragement .My sincerest thanks goes to my family; my parents Jack and Betty Zlotnick, my children Dylan, Jay and Roxy and my sister Zia Adler and brother Myron Zlotnick for their unwavering encouragement and support.

I would like to thank my partner Jacob Seidman for his creative insight and amazing patience. For joining and sharing with me this journey of self-refection and personal growth.

Thank to Fee Halsted Berning for all her help, hospitality and assistance in the research of Wonderboy Nxumalo at the Admore Studio. It was also a great privilege to meet and converse with Wonderboy Nxumalo himself, I thank him for sharing his life experiences and his art reflected on the canvas of his vessels.

Finally I would like to thank Greenside Design Center: Des Laubser and Ingrid Templar for the sponsorship of this research.

I am forever indebted to my supervisor Professor Alan Crump, for his generosity of spirit, kindness and encouragement; introducing me to ideas, places and people I might never have met along the way.

The telling of the stories of these artists and their work became a metaphor for my own life story and with it the understanding that we all share the same desires and aspirations. At the heart of the human story is the desire to belong and at the core is love.
