ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I would like to extend my heartfelt thanks to the following people:

My supervisor, Mrs Roshini Pillay, for guiding me throughout the study. Her patience, tolerance and belief in me are greatly appreciated.

Ms Lucy Alexandra for editing this research report.

My mother, Maphuti Emily Maupye, and my aunt, Tlou Tryphosa Thobejane for support and understanding of my studies.

My grandparents, Othaniel and Annah Maupye, for understanding, motivation and love throughout the years of my studies and also for taking care of my beloved daughter during the time of my studies.

My beloved daughter, Phuti Tshegofatso Maupye, for understanding when I could not be with you when you needed me. I did this for her so that she can have a better future.

My cousin, Hendrick Makgabo Tsiri, for your valuable contribution to this study.

My friend, Rebotile Letsoalo for words of encouragements throughout my studies.

The Department of Social Development, for granting me permission to conduct the study within the Department.

The social workers in the Waterberg District for their participation in this study.

Last but not least, I thank GOD for giving me strength and wisdom to complete my study. My LORD you have never left nor forsaken me. I did nothing to deserve this, yet I am surrounded by His greatness. Morena Ditheto di ya go swanela.

ABSTRACT

Supervision in the social work profession is fundamental to training, as it helps social workers to develop their professional capabilities and improves their skills and knowledge of rendering quality services to clients. Lack of supervision for newly qualified social workers may compromise the quality of services received by clients. Effective supervision is associated with good quality service to clients, increased professional development and greater job satisfaction for social workers. A qualitative study was conducted with a sample of 20 newly qualified social workers employed at the Department of Social Development in Waterberg District of the Limpopo Province where individual supervision is the most commonly used method of supervision. The aim of the study was to explore the perceptions and experiences of newly qualified social workers regarding supervision at their workplaces. The data was collected through semi-structured interviews, using semi-structured interview schedule, and analysed using thematic content analysis. The non-probability and purposive sampling was applied. The main findings were that the newly qualified social workers recognised many of the strengths of the Department of Social Development Supervision Framework which included: ethics, a supervision contract, professional development and compliance with the Framework. The data analysed also revealed that supervision within the DSD is not conducted in compliance with the Supervision Framework and various factors affecting the quality of supervision in the Department were highlighted. This report concludes with a brief discussion of the findings and recommendations.

Key words: Newly qualified social workers, supervision, social development, evaluation, perceptions, Framework for Supervision, Limpopo Province, South Africa
