As Black Cotton is the Symbol for Unrewarded Struggle, a Black Woman is
The Pillar of our society.
Were it not for her, we could never be.

~~A skin~~

A Black woman, is an ordinary woman just with darker skin.

Most from African descent.

Although today black women are becoming more and more equal to <sup>women of</sup> other races and to men, in the past they have struggled alot through racism and just as women in general. In other words, they ~~has~~ were seen to be inferior to men and to women of other races.

Over the past decades, they have fought for equality and are achieving their goal.

No longer is it just the woman who stays home, and cleans, cooks & looks after the children.

Some men have joined the women in their struggle and have decided to leave the mentality that women are inferior to men and now share duties in society & at home.

It has not happened all around the world yet but it is happening.

WOMAN IS not black
but a thousand shades
of brown

Woman is not a simple victim or whore
but a thousand shades
of difference

Woman is my mother
pink, my wife ebony
my daughter lavender

If it were easy to do, I would've done it ~~ready~~ already. It's easier said than done. Being this; me. It's hard. Constantly battling with myself, the one person I feel I understand the least. Meanwhile, this is the one person the one woman I should understand the most.
