Acknowledgements

Many people were supportive of me as I wrote this Research Report. I'd like to thank:

The people of Kliptown, especially Gene Duiker, Bob Nameng, Ntokozo Dube, and Eva Mokoka for their time and conversations;

My family, especially Roger Jardine for helping me create the space and time to write, and Anne Jardine for her enthusiasm for my work and for Kliptown stories;

Penny Plowman for being there throughout the writing process;

My writing sisters in not one, but two, writing groups that offered me enormous support and critical feedback: Erica Emdon, Liesl Jobson, Safiya Magera, Mandy Morris and Monique Verduyn; and Maud Dlomo, Sheri Hamilton, Karen Hurt, Karen Martin, Dudu Mlambo, and Jackie Mondl; and

My supervisor, Jonathan Hyslop, for his encouragement and support from the start.

Declaration

I declare that this research report is my own unaided and original work. Abstract

This Research Report comprises two parts: a theoretical introduction and a creative component entitled “What Happened to Kliptown?” The overall piece of work focuses on Kliptown, an historic area about 20 kilometres south-west of Johannesburg, between Eldorado Park and Soweto. Kliptown was the site of the Congress of the People in June 1955 where the Freedom Charter was reviewed and adopted. The Research Report focuses on the work of the Johannesburg Development Agency (JDA) in Kliptown to build a monument and set of buildings on Freedom Square, re-named the Walter Sisulu Square of Dedication. The JDA’s work in Kliptown was initiated in preparation for their hosting 50th anniversary celebrations in June 2005.

The theoretical introduction explores themes of development and memorialisation in post-apartheid South Africa as well as ‘the spectacle’ and ‘the ordinary’ in relation to Kliptown’s development. The essay also explores the writing process for the creative piece including:

- My choice of topic;
- My choice of form and structure; and
- The process of writing and revising.

The creative component of “What Happened to Kliptown?” is written in the first person, present tense. The piece charts my journey to explore the new Square in Kliptown and its impact, especially in relation to how the residents of Kliptown engage with the Square. I then explore the perspective of some of the people who worked for the JDA on the project. The piece is written in numerous sections and scenes that weave together stories from Kliptown’s history, Kliptown’s present and my personal experience.
