ABSTRACT

This research project focused on the subjective experiences of divorce, experienced by men within the South African context. It involved conducting focus groups, as well as individual interviews, with the aim of eliciting common themes. The data was analysed using thematic content analysis and the themes were then categorized with the assistance of Bronfenbrenner's ecological theory of development. This provided a framework to order the myriad themes that emerged through the interviews, which varied from emotional responses to the prolonged and complex stressor sequence that is divorce, legal issues around custody, as well as the broader financial and social impact experienced by the men involved. These themes included the negative as well as positive impacts experienced by divorced men.

DECLARATION

I declare that this thesis is my own unaided work. It is submitted for the degree of Master of Arts in the University of the Witwatersrand, Johannesburg. It has not been submitted before for any other degree or examination in any other university.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I would like to thank my supervisor, Patrick Connolly, for all the guidance and advice on completing this research project. Without his knowledge and supervision, I would not have known where to begin, much less where to end.

To my parents, Arthur and Gaby, and my sister, Giselle, thank you for supporting me, not only through this year but also through all the years before. Thank you for keeping me going and for helping me get through, even when I did not think I could. Thank you for all the times you reminded me of what I was capable of and for not letting me give up.

I would like to thank my colleagues and friends. Thank you for keeping me on the right track and for assisting me when I was not quite sure where to proceed next. Thank you for all the laughs and for your sense of humour, which on many occasions brightened up my day and made it all worthwhile.

Lastly, thank you to my fiancée Chantal. For keeping me believing in myself and standing by me when the times got tough, I will be forever grateful. Thank you for showing me that with perseverance anything is possible.
